

More than just hanging your clothes

Bizarrely enough, the humble clothes peg has quite a following, from the early years in Hollywood to the bawdy world of bondage; here are just a few of the many uses we have found;

- Mini-clamps in modelling hobbies
- Hanging old-type film up to dry after developing as well as prints when they are drying
- Substitute for a nose clamp used in diving
- Clipping music sheets to music stands to prevent the wind from turning the page, or the music sheet from blowing away when playing outside
- Artists use pegs to suspend their brushes in oil to keep them supple, or when they are in a cleaning solution. The peg is balanced on the top of a jar holding the brush so that the brush end is in the fluid, but not touching the bottom, which could ruin the brush.
- Holding the corners of a quilt & cover when putting a quilt cover on
- Matching sets of bras and briefs. Peg them together before putting them in the drawer.
- Attached to pieces of string and pinned to a notice board for various uses
- Edge of the tablecloth as weights to hold it in place
- To hold a match – this can give a few extra inches of safety between your fingers and the ignition point
- Amuse children by using pegs in the game 'Red Peggy', which is similar to an Easter egg hunt
- Protect tender plants during the winter by making a bubble-wrap tepee. Using three garden canes placed in the ground in a circle, bind at the top, and wrap bubble-wrap around the canes and hold it together with a few pegs
- A couple of pegs and a piece of that very useful kitchen roll, and you've got a disposable bib for your baby
- Finding your car in a large car park. Simply peg a piece of brightly coloured card, or some coloured ribbon to your car's aerial
- Peg a towel around the rim of the umbrella to make an tent to protect from sun and wind on the beach
